Scam Alert

Adobe users targeted in dangerous new phishing campaign

By Barclay Ballard 4 days ago

Phishing scam uses an authentic-looking email pretending to be from Adobe

(Image credit: Shutterstock / DRogatnev)

A new phishing attack has been discovered targeting Adobe users. This particular campaign uses an email that purports to be from the non-existent service Adobe Cloud, which informs the targeted individual that they have files to download.

The phishing attack carries all the hallmarks of previously seen campaigns. The email contains brand logos that appear genuine, as well as a URL, which until further inspection, looks like it contains an Adobe domain name.

The next stage of the attack prompts the victim to "Access Your Secured Document," which subsequently leads them to a login page for Microsoft Office 365, Google, or their email account.

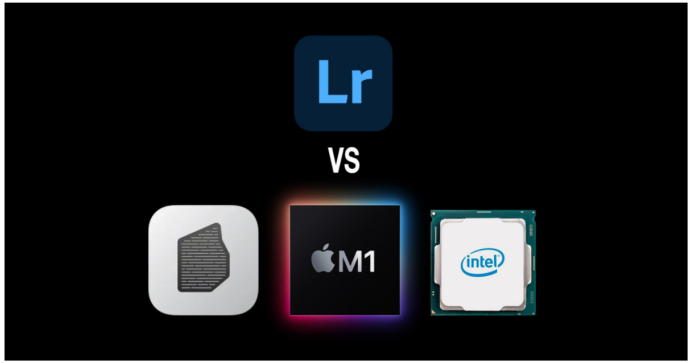
Benchmarking Performance: Lightroom on M1 vs Rosetta 2 vs Intel

DEC 08, 2020 JARON SCHNEIDER

Share 4 Tweet 2 COMMENTS



Today Adobe publicly announced native support for Apple Silicon, which means you won't have to emulate with Rosetta 2 to edit photos if you have a new M1-equipped Mac. But is there a noticeable improvement over emulation, or even over Intel-based machines? After testing, we have some answers.
