Artificial Intelligence and machine learning advancements have allowed researchers to build detailed 3D models of real-world locations by using the reference data of thousands of tourists' photos. The finished models have cleanly removed unwanted objects and even normalized lighting conditions.

BBC: Beautiful photos of an ugly history

By Andrew Dickson 3rd February 2021

Gordon Parks documented deep, wounding issues that have long been a part of the US story. Andrew Dickson explores the work of a man who compared his camera to a weapon, yet shot his photos with the eye of a poet.

"LIBERTY OR DEATH," read the placards, the lettering stark black on white. "WE ARE LIVING IN A POLICE STATE." We can't really see who's holding them – they're cloaked in shadow – though at least some of the protestors appear to be African American. The only face fully visible is that of a police officer. Despite the fact that the protestors are crowding in on him, he looks unmoved, even faintly bored. He is white.

While incredible sweeping overhead shots of migrating birds is a must-have for wildlife documentaries on Discovery or Netflix, it's rare to be able to capture those angles otherwise. Photographer Mark Zakurikan managed to do so with a drone and the footage is beautiful.
