Playboy Enters the NFT Market, Plans to Sell Art and Support Creators

Long term, Playboy and Nifty Gateway plan to use this digital ownership market in three different areas: to cultivate collaborations between artists and Playboy's art archive, to support and commission the creation of new NFT works through grants that support emerging or underrepresented artists, and to curate and sell Playboy's own extensive photographic and art collection.

Artists will receive a revenue share paid out from Playboy's 80% share in the partnership. Any subsequent marketplace sales will have a 10% fee paid out to Playboy, which will also contain a revenue share for the artist.

Lifestyle and entertainment giant, Playboy, is entering the non-fungible token (NFT) market with plans to sell its extensive art collection and to support emerging artists.

In a surprising move Sony announced two small updated version of their current A7rIII and A7rIV cameras. In both cases the cameras get a small “a” suffix.

So what’s new?

1. LCD resolution has changed from 1.44 million dots to 2,359,296 dots
2. They both support USB 3.2.
3. The Sony logo under LCD monitor has been removed
4. There are also small changes in their battery life

At the end of March, photographer Alexandru Barbovski photographed the split second it took for the International Space Station to pass in front of the moon. After perfectly capturing the rare passing, he spent a few more minutes taking additional images to create what is known as a "Mineral Moon."

Researchers from Virginia Tech's Institute for Critical Technology and Applied Science \(ICTAS\) have shared a brief 3-second video clip that shows what happens when a DJI Mavic 2 Pro drone collides into a car windshield at 100 kilometers per hour (62.5 miles per hour).

Jaw-Dropping Video of the Moon Was Shot with Modular Leica DSLR lens

APR 09, 2021 JARON SCHNEIDER

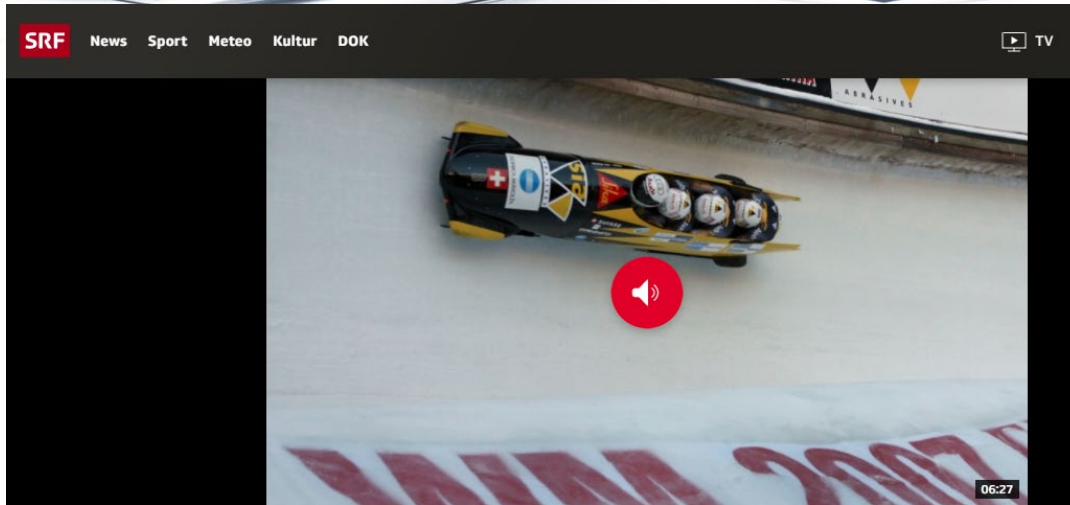

A video showcasing the incredible optical quality of the Leica APO-Telyt-R 400mm f/2.8 lens recently surfaced, and the quality that this lens exhibits (which today retails used for \$15,000 used) in 4K video is mind-blowing... especially considering the footage was shot from Earth.

Abmahnung der Bildagentur: Bobfahrerin soll 600 Franken zahlen

Weil sie vor 14 Jahren ein kleines Reuters-Bild auf ihre Homepage gestellt hat, wird eine Bobfahrerin zur Kasse gebeten.

Über 14 Jahre später: Bild sofort löschen

Mit den Jahren verschwand die Einladung samt Foto in den virtuellen Tiefen der Website. Im März 2021 erhält Sabina Hafner dann ein beunruhigendes Schreiben der Firma «PicRights». Es bestehe ein «Verdacht auf Nutzung des Bildes / der Bilder von Reuters News & Media Inc. ohne Lizenz». Falls sie tatsächlich keine Lizenz habe, seien die Aufnahmen umgehend zu löschen und überdies sei ein Betrag von 585 Franken zu bezahlen.

So ähnlich sah das beanstandete Bild aus: selber Bob, selbe Kurve, selbe Bahn, anderer Wettkampf (Schweizermeisterschaft 2006 in St. Moritz). Dieses Bild stammt aus dem Privatarchiv von Sabina Hafner, ein Kollege hat es aufgenommen.

How I Adapted an f/0.75 X-Ray Lens to E-Mount for Use in Portraiture

For years now, industrial super-fast lenses have been on the back of my mind. But one thing always held me back, and that was the fact that most images I could find were frankly uninspiring, boring, fuzzy macro shots at best. So I couldn't justify spending hundreds of dollars on unpractical medical equipment.

Image tagging made easy

Ed explains...

I always wanted to develop this product. I started with it 2 years ago. After my retirement in November 2019 I could really concentrate me on TAGGER.biz: image-recognition in big collections. After many years of digital photography I've produced a large collection of untagged images: it was a chaos, not possible to find anything. So, after one year of hard work, together with the support of Elena (KISS: keep it simple stupid) and Cesar (Lightroom requirements), we can now present you:
